Re: Recommendation for Terry E. Welch and the law firm of Parr Waddoups

To Whom it May Concern,

I am writing to recommend Terry E. Welch and the law firm of Parr Waddoups as skilled providers of commercial legal services and, specifically, to recommend Mr. Welch as an outstanding patent litigation attorney and strategist. He is an exceptional advocate and presenter, and an amazingly quick study, especially in technically challenging subject matter. He is not only a talented attorney, capable orator and persuasive trial attorney—but a genuine and trustworthy individual.

I am Chief Technological Officer for HemaMetrics, Inc., a medical products developer and manufacturer specializing in the development and practical application of innovative medical devices generally associated with blood science diagnostics. I have a doctorate in Engineering and Computational Fluid Dynamics and am a co-founder.

From time to time, HemaMetrics has required legal services pertaining to various commercial and intellectual property issues. We first hired Terry Welch as local counsel in a large patent infringement suit in the Spring of 2000 after having used a large nationally known IP firm for more than a year on the case. Eventually, after having seen that his expertise and legal prowess in such patent suits rivaled or surpassed that of our national counsel—and seeing that his billing rate was far lower, we hired him as lead counsel. He capably handled the remainder of that suit. During that time and since, we also have hired him on various other commercial litigation matters and have used others at his firm on corporate matters.

Without hesitation, I can state that Mr. Welch's capabilities are outstanding. His skills in and out of the courtroom, in depositions, and on paper have surpassed our expectations. Having used numerous local and national firms over the years both with HemaMetrics and other companies in which I was a principal, it is easy for me to endorse Mr. Welch and his colleagues at Parr Waddoups as being both as talented as any attorneys with whom I've dealt and a genuine bargain in terms of cost effectiveness. His availability has been outstanding, his attention invariably on point, and his billing practices have been honest and open. We have found that he has a unique ability to sense—and keep at the forefront—our interests throughout all phases of litigation. We have therefore considered his input as value added to our organization.

May I also add that the pricing structure of Parr Waddoups has been of significant advantage to us in that they are priced lower (significantly lower) than national firms with no corresponding reduction in skill level, attention to detail or creativity. As a matter of course, Mr. Welch and his colleagues provide candid and forthright assessments of issues, risks, costs and benefits.

I therefore highly recommend Mr. Welch as capable, creative, honest, hard-working, efficient, effective and exceptional patent litigator and trial attorney. He is a pleasure to work with and one who would capably serve any client for whom he advocates.
